PG Knee The Wizards (3-8) are back at Capital One Arena Wednesday night hosting the San Antonio Spurs (5-9) at 7:00 P.M. in the first outing of a three-game homestand. This will be the second and final meeting of the season, with the Spurs on top of the 124-122 week of the season. Game Info Capital One Arena | 19:00 H.M. 20000 000 00 1500 AM Probable pre-breakfasts: G - Isaiah Thomas, G - Bradley Beal, F - Troy Brown Jr., F - Rui Hachimura, C - Thomas Bryant Spurs: G - Bryn Forbes, G - Dejounte Murray, F - Demar Derozan, F - Lamarck Aldridge, C - Trey Lyle Injury Report Wizards: John Wall (left Achilles rehab - out), Ian Mahin (right Achilles strain - out) Spurs: Derrick White (left foot soreness - out) Storylines Wizards must be discharged home before a difficult trip The Wizards haven't played a home game since November 8, losing 113-100 to the Cleveland Cavaliers. Despite one offense that is among the best in the league, Bradley Beal's dominance and significant contributions from a collection of promising young players, the Wizards sit just 3-8 on the season. With four games, all against western conference teams over .500, the Wizards should take advantage of a favorable three home games. The Wizards match up with the Spurs ahead of games against the Charlotte Hornets and Sacramento Kings. The trio of opponents combined for a 16-24 record this season. The Wizards made a two-point meeting with the Spurs earlier this season and are yet to face Charlotte and Sacramento. At the end of the home stand, the Wizards went to Denver to take a 9-3 lead over the Nuggets, who have won six of their last seven games. The next night, at the back end of the Wizards' second road trip back in the season, Washington took on a Suns team that was one of the league's most notable surprises at the start of the season. After a day off, the trip ends in Los Angeles with weekend games with the Lakers and Clippers. The Combined Record of the Wizards' four opponents on the trip was dominant 36-15. Banks win at home this week before embarking on what is likely to be a the team's most challenging trip of the season. More minutes for Moe? Moritz Wagner's early season was a bright spot for the Wizards, highlighted by a 30-point, 15th straight win in Minnesota last Friday. The energetic - sometimes frantic - style of the game sets the tone for the Wizards bench, which is among the best in the league. Wagner has the highest 3-point shooting percentage among centers, taking at least two per game (48.1%), leading the league in download fees (11) and is among the best in net rating (15.0). In the Wizards' first nine games, Wagner spun 18 minutes just twice, partly because of Washington's deep front and partly because of his struggle not to cause trouble. While he maintains the energy that has propelled his success so far, he is likely to see a more significant role in the Wizards' rotation as the season progresses. Scoring at Spurs When the teams meet, just days into the 2019-20 season, the Wizards have scored the second of three straight wins for San Antonio. Spurs have won four of their first five games, outscoring their opponents by almost eight points per game in their victories. However, those four wins came against teams that now hold a 14-39 overall record this season. Since then, and as their schedule has grown increasingly difficult, San Antonio has struggled to maintain its glowing momentum. The Spurs have lost six consecutive games, including a 117-110 defeat at the hands of Dallas on Monday night and eight of their last nine. San Antonio's defensive rating during their 4-1 start was 107.3, enough quantity since their offense exploded to a rating of 112.4, the fourth-best in the league. In his six games losing streak, Spurs struggled and finished on defense. The offense maintains a top-10 rating, while the defense ranks second at 120.2. The Spurs have allowed 110-plus points in all six losses, including 120 or more three times. While the Wizards have had their own defensive struggles this season, Washington's offense has been one of the best in the league in recent weeks and should be able to find success Wednesday night. (Photo by Kim Klement-Pool/Getty Images) It all warmed up. After a year of turbulence and unexpected road blocks, the final day of the San Antonio Spurs' 2019-20 regular season is on us and they need luck to make the playoffs. Seven teams face off Thursday afternoon, sealing games that will be played in the Western Conference play-off tournament. There are several ways the San Antonio Spurs will make the ninth seed and all require to win their game against the Utah Jazz. That wouldn't be difficult, given that the regular crew from Orlando's restart is good to go by with Forbes (thigh), Zeller (knee), Lyles (appendectomy) and Aldridge (shoulder) sidelined. Whether it will be to prepare for the postseason or because of legitimate concern is up in the air, but two key Jazz players will sit: center Rudy Gobert (back), guard Mike Conley (knee). In addition, backup guard Emmanuel Mudiay is questionable with left knee soreness. Basically, the Spurs need to do an almost decent job of hiding Donovan Mitchell, Joe Ingles and Jordan Clarkson to secure the win. However, spurs are dependent on some unlikely results. Memphis had to lose to a Milwaukee team without Yannis, who was suspended for beating a Wizards player in the previous game. May I say... Oh! Moreover, starter Wes Matthews is out with an adducto injury and their veteran shooting guard, Illyava, is questionable. As at the end of the case, the Grizzlies will be underemployed without Winslow, Jackson Jr. and Jones. More from Air Alamo If not MVP-free to do business, the Spurs need one from the Phoenix Suns or Portland Trail Blazers to lose too. Brooklyn is to bring everyone in, but Jamal Crawford plays against the Blazers and is a surprisingly entertaining team in the bubble. Kristaps Porskis. You can expect Luke to play, but the supporting cast is not yet clear. Sharpshooter Set Curry is also questionable, but the likelihood is that Finney-Smith and Kleber will play to give the Spurs a chance to come to that. They are as strong as the NBA had hoped. Whether they do it or not, Spurs should be proud of how they performed in the bubble. If their stay is extended, then great! But if not, there's nothing to fall asleep for. Lottery work is more valuable. Next up: Four players who hopefully descend on Orlando (still, capturing a 23-year NBA playoff record) will be pretty amazing. Amazing.
